

RAVENS IN OUR COMMUNITY

CRUCIAL CATCH DAY

In partnership with the American Cancer Society (ACS), the NFL's Crucial Catch: Intercept Cancer campaign has provided another year of funding to support increased access to cancer education and screening resources in underserved communities. Money raised from joint efforts allowed the NFL and ACS to award a $50,000 grant to the Baltimore Medical Systems facility at St. Agnes Hospital, continuing its efforts to increase breast and colon cancer screenings in the area. As part of the grant, the Ravens participated in Crucial Catch Day on Wednesday, Oct. 18, a nationwide event that was held in cities across the country to help people receive detectable and screenable cancer education and participate in screenings. During the event, Ravens cheerleaders and mascot Poe were onsite at St. Agnes Hospital to greet patients undergoing treatment and fans who had participated in cancer screenings throughout the day.

RAVENS AND VERIZON PASS IT FORWARD

On Oct. 10, the Baltimore Ravens and Verizon continued their four-month "Pass It Forward" campaign when they surprised fans with random acts of kindness at various locations throughout the Baltimore community. Ravens DE Bronson Kaufusi greeted fans at a West Baltimore Royal Farms gas station, where he distributed gift cards to help fuel up their cars. Next, Bronson and Ravens cheerleaders traveled to Mary Anne Winterling Elementary School in Baltimore City, where he surprised students with a complimentary lunch. Following the lunch period, Verizon led fifth-grade students through a STEM activity in the school's library. The campaign is a joint effort between the Ravens and Verizon to create a positive social movement that encourages recipients to "Pass It Forward."
