

RAVENS IN OUR COMMUNITY

USO MILITARY CARE PACKAGE STUFFING

Following the Ravens' bye week, the team partnered with United Service Organizations (USO) of Metropolitan Washington-Baltimore to put together care packages for military children. On Monday, Nov. 13, over 40 Ravens staff members were joined by Ravens head coach John Harbauagh (pictured bottom left) and various Ravens players at the Under Armour Performance Center, where they worked together to stuff over 1,500 care packages. The package stuffing was part of the Ravens' Salute to Service campaign, and the "Polar Express"-themed packages will be delivered to local military families during the holiday season.

PLAY 60 SCHOOL VISITS

Throughout the season, the Baltimore Ravens have been surprising students at local elementary and middle schools that have excelled in the Ravens' PLAY 60 Challenge. Several local schools completed the challenge by encouraging their students to become physically active for at least 60 minutes every day. On Oct. 30, DE Bronson Kaufusi (pictured right), and QB Josh Woodrum visited the first of three elementary schools whose children recorded the most hours spent exercising over a two-week period. Each of the three winning schools will receive a PLAY 60 assembly featuring Ravens cheerleaders, mascot Poe and a surprise visit by current Ravens players.

COCA-COLA MILITARY COMBINE

On Nov. 18, the Ravens and Coca-Cola invited 120 service members from four military branches to participate in a combine competition at the Under Armour Performance Center. Through a partnership with USO of Metropolitan Washington-Baltimore, each service branch competed against one another in sets of football and military training drills. At the end of the competition, members of the Navy branch were crowned victorious. As winners of the military combine, these individuals earned the opportunity to lead the Ravens onto the field during the Salute to Service game on Nov. 27 against the Houston Texans.
